

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

Name: Fiona Inston

Job title: Head of Public Protection

Can you tell us a little about your role?

My role is very diverse and is focused on protecting people . I lead a team and the service is diverse from covid, ensuring we eat safe food, drink safe water, raising standards in the private sector housing stock, treatment of pests, fly tipping, anti social behaviour. A lot of my role is working in partnership with others to improve lives.

What are the key moments in your career journey so far?

Last week I was invited to the garden party at Buckingham Palace linked to my covid work which was a highlight. Some of my key moments in my career was early on when I took on new projects, started to work in partnership with others and the learning and confidence I gained from the experiences. This led to returning to uni to complete my Public Health Masters.

Key moments do not always have to be the headliners - it is about the differences you have made and however small you think they are - they can make a significant impact on others.
