FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT

Development Management Officers offer pre-application advice on a professional basis on behalf of the Council's Elected Councillors and Committees. They provide this advice in the wider public interest, taking into account planning policies and material planning considerations.

Pre-application advice does not constitute a formal decision by the Council. Therefore, it cannot be held to bind the Council in either its validation or formal determination of any subsequent planning application. A final decision on any development proposal can only be taken once the subsequent planning application has been submitted and after the Council has consulted local people, statutory consultees and any other interested representatives.

If a planning application is later submitted which fails to take on-board the advice given by Officers, then the Council retains the right to refuse the application without further discussion with the applicant or their agent. The weight that can be attributed to pre-application advice will usually diminish over time due to any future changes to national planning legislation or changes to national or local planning policy. Additionally, the advice provided is based upon the information that you submit. If it transpires that this information was inaccurate, then the advice ceases to carry any weight. Similarly, if new information is revealed during the planning application process, then this can affect the eventual outcome of the planning application.
